

I grew up in the Baptist faith, going to church with my grandparents and mother. Around 10 years old while attending a church camp I gave my life to God and entered into a relationship with Jesus. Later that year I was baptized.

During High School I struggled with depression and anxiety. God never left me but stayed close to me. He put people in my life that supported and helped me move from flunking out to an honor student by my senior year.

Deciding to continue my education, after high school, I attended college and chose a dual degree in psychology and criminal justice. Then again in my senior year of college a disaster happened and I ended up in the hospital with a nervous breakdown. I could not finish my degree, I could not work and my doctors put me on disability.

During this time, my health started to deteriorate and I began to feel my life was somewhat worthless. Throughout everything God never left my side. After feeling the Lord call me back to him, I started my journey back to an intimate relationship with Jesus. He is now healing me emotionally and physically.

Three years ago I attended my first single's retreat. God has given me a passion for singles. He has shown me how my past can give me a better understanding and passion to help others.

As my relationship with Jesus continues to mature, I pray for wisdom, guidance and courage. So that I will take each step He asks of me confidently.
